Questionnaire

Initial Evaluation of Workplace Program

Use this resource to evaluate the effectiveness of a workplace program to create a safer and more supportive work environment for workers who may experience domestic violence, sexual assault, stalking, and harassment.

Pre-Mapping Your Evaluation

Holistic evaluation of a workplace program can help employers get a full understanding of how successful the program is and identify potential gaps. Counterintuitively, program evaluation begins prior to program implementation by mapping where you want the program to go using your resources, which is also known as a logic model.

A logic modelⁱ is identifying a series of inputs (staff, money, time, equipment, partnerships, etc.), outputs (workshops, conferences, products produced, people reached, etc.), and outcomes that result in a value and/or a belief change.

A logic model is the road map of the program and can be used to measure the outcomes and results of your program during all stages of development, execution, and completion. To learn more about logic models in program evaluation, please visit FUTURES' resource Beyond Checking the Boxes: a Discussion on Education Program Evaluations.

Create Your Model ⁱⁱ

Use this chart below to outline your program inputs, outputs, and intended impact to refer back to throughout the evaluation process.

Inputs What we invest in the program	Outputs What we do and/who we reach	Outcomes-Impact What are the short-term and medium-term outcomes? What is our ultimate impact?

Post-Completion Evaluation

After program completion, use this form to evaluate how the program functions and operates, and matches the intended outcomes from the logic model. This questionnaire and open-ended questions are to be filled out by the team tasked with designing these policies and programs.

Indicate how much you agree with the following statements for each form of violence by rating them on a scale of 1-3. (1 is disagree; 2 is don't know/neutral; 3 is agree.)
